SATURDAY MORNING, NOVEMBER 12, 1859. THE ADVANTAGES OF POVERTY.

Of course by this we do not mean that penury and absolute want are beneficial, but that to be so far relatively poor as to feel that one's circumstances do not come up to ! one's wants and expectations and desires, while it has its obvious disadvantages, is also highly useful and advantageous to most men in several respects. As to happiness, for instance. Take two young men of equal health and education, one notoriously rich and the other not worth a cent, and the poor man will, in more than half the number of instances, be the most cheerful and happy man of the two. He will have fewer indulgences and excesses to react upon his system, fewer sources of anxiety and dread, fewer unemployed hours to let the mind turn in broodingly upon itself. He is compelled to be at work regularly, lives carefully, sleeps soundly, and is happy. There is many a young man who begins life cheerful and happy, but who increases regularly in riches and in size, in the comforts of home and the luxuries and refinements of all advancing position, and yet, as he does this, will conless that he is not so happy now, rolling in wealth, as twenty years ago when worth nothing but a clear head, a brisk pair of hands, and the conviction that the world was for sale by before him.

As to the prospect even of becoming wealthy, the poor man at starting is, on the whole, we believe better off than the young man who receives an inheritance to begin with. Facts show this. True, money grows and paves the way finely to success. gift of the wise man maketh room for him." But the ways of getting rid of money also grow, and much faster in every young man who has more money in his purse than he knows what to do with. We have known young men not spending more than two hundred dollars a year, yet moving always in the best society, and we have known young men to get through nearer twenty thousand without being really respectable or half so happy. Habits of frugality, forethought and patient calculation as to where the means were to come from for anything wanted, are the necessary foundations of enduring wealth. Without these, no matter how rich a man may be to day; either he or his children will get through it all in a very short time. So far from a capital to begin with being necessary to operate upon, the want of capital often teaches the poor man superior financial wisdom and econ-

As to fame, few rich men, at the beginning of life, ever win it in any pursuit that requires labor or peril. It is the children tugging at the lawyer's gown that makes him an eloquent pleader at the bar. In fact, strong necessities and pressing wants do more to elicit genius and develope greatness, than can well be described. A man rolling in wealth and luxury has too many enticements to ease, to climb the rugged path of lofty achievement. As to care, there is no comparison. The poor man has nothing to lose, while the rich live in perpetual dread .--The abundance of the rich will not suffer friends are true and disinterested. It has often been said that prosperity makes friends, and adversity tries them. But the real fact is exactly the other way. It is adversity that makes real friends and prosperity that tries for sale by

And now, as to the next generation. Are he children of wealthy or of poor parents are children of wealthy or of poor parents by J. WILLIAM BOWLING, the children of wealthy or of poor parents (those parents being of equal intelligence sale by nov 7 The strongest, healthiest, finest men, grow up from boys who have to do all they can for a living. It is possible, no doubt, for the and character) most likely to prosper?children of the wealthy to be thus brought up. Yet not one child in a hundred is: most of them are pampered and puny, without the same bodily vigor, and, therefore, without the same mental strength and fortitude which those of a more hardy training exhibit. The habit of self-reliance is the foundation of all independence of character, and this is closely connected with every virtue. Yet none are so self-reliant as the poor.

So far, then, the chief advantage of wealth is the means it affords of superior mental cultivation, superior books, and apparatus of learning of all kinds. This is the chief advantage of it. Where wealth is only regarded as capital, the principal of which is only to make the possessor more wise and powerful for good—there it is a blessing and one of the greatest of blessings. But directly any many feels resulting the transfer of the greatest of blessings. But directly any man feels wealthy-that is, that he has more money than he knows how and needs to use, as capital for higher good and more extended usefulness-then his money becomes an injury to him and not a blessing.

Many, with a little assistance, surmount the evils of poverty in obtaining an education, and every thing else-few that of too much wealth. In one State at least, even a University education is without charge. Many work their way through and those who do, almost always make the best scholars. Indeed some of those now among the highest literary men in the land, have worked their cuniary advantages of others around them.

BUNYAN's PLAGIARISM(?)-The cream of all the criticisms, late and early, on "The Pilgrim's Progress" may be found in "Allibone's Dictionary of Authors," and there may be found a notice of the idleguess that the allefound a notice of the idle guess that the allegory was suggested by, or stolen from, a work published by Caxton, in 1483; and it is about published by Caxton, in 1483; and it is about as probable that Bunyan never saw or heard of that volume, as that he saw Caxton's ghost. Quoting the conjecture from the Retrospective Review, 1,250, Mr. Allibone, with his usual excellent judgment, says: "We shall only remark that, if a supposed or even real similarity between the productions of the of the LYCEUM HALL, S. W. corner of Prince and human mind is to be accepted as a proof of derivation, then—to use a favorite phrase of and from 75 to 9 o'clock, P. M. Annual subscrip-Dr. Johnson—of such conjecture, "there will be no end." Mr. Allibone's admirable view of the conjecture of the conjectur view, as clear and complete as it is concise, of Bunyan's life and work, will enable any one to note at a glance the absurd, however Benjamin Barton, ingenious, speculation that Bunyan's allegory was not the history of his own experi-

The Charter of this Company offers more favora ble advantages to the farmer and others, than any Company chartered in the State, by insuring with or without a premium note. If the applicaprefer, he can pay the full amount of the premisin in cash, or by effecting a cash insurance for two years, the insured saves one eighth of the amount he would otherwise have to pay; or by becoming a member, and giving a small premium note, the in-sured saves nearly one-half of the amount charged by Stock Companies, when insuring from year to year. This is the advantage resulting from the combination of the CASH AND MUTUAL PRINCIPLE.

This Company commenced issuing Policies against loss or damage by fire, on the 13th day of March, 1854, since which time over seven then and seven hundred persons have insured and become members of the Company, and over seventy thou sand dollars have been paid for losses. Having increased our business during the past year, we feel grateful for the liberal patronage bestowed upon the Company thus far, and for its flattering propects of future usefulness. The Directors hope and believe, that, by prudence, caution, and a rigid system of economy, they will establish for the Company a reputation for cheapness and safety 147.
